THURSDAY MORNING, JAN. 9, 1862.

Propositions of Peace to Rebellion.

Let those who cry "Peace! peace!" trace the history of this rebellion from its origin to its development. The conspiracy which produced it had evidently been nursed by some of its actors for more than a quarter of a century, but must have swelled its numbers, and gained its full and formidable proportions within a year of its development. It sought the occasion of Mr. Lincoln's election and inauguration as the best suited to its treasonable purposes; a time and upon an occasion upon which it evidently supposed it could better arouse Southern feeling, stimulate Southern prejudice, and awake sectional hostility. But while it has this advantage it, unfortunately for its sincerity of success with the loyal Southern mind, chose a time when the South and its sympathizers had a majority in both branches of Congress and in the Supreme Court of the United States, and a time, too, when the law concerning fugitives was more thoroughly executed than it had been for years, and when Congress was organizing Territorial governments without restriction, for which Southern rights advocates had so long contended; and, moreover, when a majority in Congress, for the sake of preserving peace, reconciling sectional differences and quieting sectional irritation, stood ready to give any further reasonable guarantee calculated to secure to the Southern States all and any rights to which they were entitled, and of which they could reasonably show they had been, or reasonably fear that they were about to be, deprived. There had been no time within twenty years when they had so little just cause of complaint as in 1861. The masses of the Southern people are honest, sincere, and Union-loving. But it is clear that the leaders who shaped the policy of the rebellion, were in pursuit of self-advancement and the Union's wrongs, and not of Southern rights. The robberies they had practiced in the Government, long before the election of Mr. Lincoln was decided, show what was in contemplation; the disposition made of the army and navy, and the arms and munitions, proves the same thing. The haste with which some of the States sought to rush out of the Union, and drag others after them; the haste they made to violate their country's flag; their cold-blooded assassination of soldiers on their way to the defense of the nation's capital; the rude, and robber, and bandit violence with which they seized ships, forts and other public property; and the public revenue within their reach; the brazen complacency with which public officials, sworn to support the Constitution, brought perjury upon their guilty souls in endeavoring to subvert it; the infidelity of naval and military commanders, in forswearing themselves, and betraying their trusts to enemies; all go to show that they had resolved to rule or ruin, and were not in pursuit of "liberal propositions of peace." Upon all this follow the organization of their bogus Confederacy; their attack upon the Star of the West; their assault upon the starving peace garrison of Sumter; their organization of a system of piracy; their harvest of peaceful dwellings and towns and driving from their homes, in destitution, of innocent women and children; their weakening of railroad bridges, that passengers might be destroyed by hundreds or maimed for life; the employment of savages to help on rebellion; their raising a mercenary and powerful army in furtherance of their traitorous designs; and, finally, their wholesale piracy, proves that for treachery and atrocity in modern times those who have conducted this rebellion will bear the palm, for when

"Of the two it is best to be
The rodent than the feline species, with teeth,
Like hedge-saws pointed, and prehensile claws keen;
Or the bear is to be preferred, the wolf is fatal."

And yet we are told that a rebellion, originating without provocation, deliberately and murderously contrived, and steeped in a depravity as black as the smoke of the bottomless pit in its origin, now that it has added to the commission of treason every other crime in the catalogue, and only escapes the halter because it is at large, should be nursed and treated tenderly, with liberal propositions of peace! Rather say, the peace its authors deserve is universal execration, and its peace apologists universal execration. The latter are already reaping their deserts in the impotence of opinion, and with the former, thank Heaven, it is only a question of time. The idea that a rebellion thus designed, thus conspired, thus inaugurated, and thus conducted, while its heart is black with perjury, and its hand stained with gore, could or should be gently asked in dulcet tones, what kind of a peace it would please to dictate to the Government it had sought to destroy, is alone worthy of the necessitous politician—the mere party hack, who supposes he can trade with rebellion as with a clique of corrupt associates, or who has no aims or impulses above party management, no range of vision beyond a caucus, no love of country, no pride in the glowing memories of the Revolution, no true contemplation of the present, no just hope for the future. Happily for our devoted country, the number of this class is small, and their influence less, and both rapidly diminishing.

These remarks of DANIEL S. DICKINSON, of New York, at a meeting of citizens in Brooklyn, cover the whole case of "peace propositions to rebellion."

School Exhibition at Astoria.

ASTORIA, Dec. 21, 1861.

Editor Oregonian:

Our little village was enlivened on Friday evening the 20th inst., with an exhibition at the Court house by the scholars and children of our "free district school," on the occasion of the close of a nine months' term by our present very excellent teachers—Mr. and Mrs. Beardorff.

The exhibition was such a complete success in all respects, so far as the scholars and teachers were concerned, and so delighted the entire audience, which was large for this village, being not less than 200 or 250 persons, and knowing that your many readers take an interest in all such matters, I have thought it but proper that a short notice of the affair should be communicated to the Oregonian; and I hope you will find room to give this notice an insertion in your daily and weekly editions.

I will in this connection say that our school is comparatively young, having been constructed upon the "free system," and "permanent institution" basis, only about a year and a half; but the progress made in that time, and particularly in the last term, shows what we might have had ere now if our townspeople had all been united upon this subject (and the custom house and post office question) during the last ten years or so, instead of being as they have been. But the exhibition comprised the following

COAL has been discovered in considerable quantities in the province of Otago, New Zealand. Sailors were deserting the ships, the value of labor had increased, and there was every appearance of all public works being stopped.

CONTRACT AWARDED.—S. J. McCormick, Esqr. of the Franklin Book Store, was awarded the contract of hauling the Supplies stationary for the ensuing year.

The Columbia river and the Pacific coast and the steamer in this harbor to Nanaimo was unable to reach that place yesterday, and returned.

EXPRESS THROUGH BY LAND TO SALMON RIVER.—See advertisement of Tracy & Co.

REBEL ACCOUNT OF THE PORT ROYAL AFFAIR.—The Charleston Courier says that the guns of Fort Walker were dismounted, the defenses were terribly shattered, and it was determined to abandon the Fort.

A long waste, about a mile in extent, and commanded by the enemy's guns, intervened between the garrison and the woods. Across this they were ordered to run for their lives, each man for himself, the object being to scatter them as much as possible, so as not to afford a target for the rifled guns of the fleet. The preparations for crossing this ground were made, but the Rebels were abandoned, but in fact leaving their muskets. Each of the wounded was placed on a blanket and carried off by four men. The safety of the living involved the idea of removing the dead. And thus the gallant little band quitted the scene of their glory, and scampered off, each one as best he could, to the woods and woods.

The abandonment of Fort Beauregard was equally a necessity. The garrisons were cut off. When Colonel Dunnovant ordered a retreat, fears of mortification and indignation filled the eyes of Captain Elliott at the said necessity. The retreat was admirably conducted, and rendered entirely successful. They got on board twelve flats and reached St. Helena Island without the loss or injury of a man. [No one was pursuing them.]

The rest of the story is easily told. The troops from Fort Walker got on board several steamboats, and reached Bluffton by water.—From thence they marched to Hardeeville, seventeen miles. The road along which they dragged their exhausted frames was filled with a heterogeneous throng of fugitives of all conditions; carriages, carts and conveyances of every description that could, by any possibility, be pressed into service. The spectacle was a sad one. Thus ended the defence of Port Royal. The mortification of the disaster is lessened by the consciousness that our troops deserved success.

What a glorious world this would be if all its inhabitants could say with Shakespeare's shepherd: "Sir, I am a true laborer: I earn that I wear; I owe no man hate: envy no man's happiness; glad of other men's good, content with my farm."

The Beverly Citizen says there is a negro in that town who says: "I only got reason why I don't go to war, might shoot some of my 'fatigue' dog the Southern slaveholders!" Rather suggestive as coming from a colored individual.

The Richmond Examiner of the 21st ultimo, speaking of the Federal troops, says: "Take them all in all, their graces and vices as a specimen of animals as could be scraped together with a fine-tooth comb from the poor-houses and hell-houses of the North. They have been fertilized by filth and grown up crisp, fresh, and unmitigated wretches from the thirsty soil of municipal corruptions."

The editor of the Plainfield (N. J.) Courier, secession print, says that even the Quakers condemn peace, and he thinks it is useless to print a peace paper under the circumstances. Good for the Quakers.

Ex-Governor Wickliffe, of Kentucky, ex-Postmaster-General, etc., is loyal to the heart's core, but has a son in the army. That son attempted to apply the torch to his own father's house in Bardstown, but Gen. Anderson sent a regiment to the rescue.

As he was reading the news that Rosecrans had likely captured Floyd, Brown asked Jones: "What will they do with him if they is 'barged?" Said Jones: "Turn him loose to catch the others, on the principle of the well-known adage, 'Set a thief to catch a thief.'"

The extent of the match manufacture appears almost fabulous. The total number of matches made in the United States has been estimated at 7,000 gross of boxes daily. Mr. Partridge, of New York, is said to be the largest manufacturer. His match works, in order to obtain wood conveniently, are situated in the timber region of Lewis county, N. Y. In Herkimer, N. Y., there is also an extensive manufactory of matches and friction patent fire kindlers. There are also several other similar match establishments in various parts of the country.

The meanest man may be useful to the greatest, and the most eminent stand in need of the meanest; in a building, the highest and the lowest stones add to their own mutual stability.

The chief secret of comfort lies in not suffering trifles to vex one, and in prudently cultivating an undergrowth of small pleasures, since very few great ones are let on long leases.

We are oftener more cruelly robbed by those who steal into our hearts than by those who break into our houses.

To all men the best friend is virtue; the best companions are high endeavors and honorable sentiments.

When there is love in the heart there are rainbows in the eyes, compiling every black cloud with gorgeous hues.

Our very manner is a thing of importance; a kind no is often more agreeable than a rough yes.
